The preparation of so-called *e*Learning courses is most complicated: different document formats require special formatting knowledge (for example html programming), parts of the course material are on different servers and *e*Learning material should be interactive. We propose a way of structuring *e*Learning content using XML, targeting the above-mentioned challenges and showing a way to integrate them into conventional *e*Learning systems (hyperwave).