The speaker will describe a hierarchical hypercube topology for a cluster of personal computers. Point-to-point links of different speeds are used for an efficient yet cost-effective topology. The design is based on the distributed vector global sum and broadcast operations commonly used by programs in the cluster. He will examine applications for general point-to-point topologies.