

The process of network testing using typical measurement tools gives very exact and reliable data, which unfortunately does not always transpose in a universal manner to the satisfaction of the end-user. In the ATRIUM project, the network is tested by advanced bandwidth-demanding applications commonly used in a GRID environment. Different test scenarios are performed on the testbed. The presentation describes the network set-up, network requirements of advanced applications, measurement mechanisms used and early measurement results.