

The speaker will present a novel architecture for class-based packet aggregation in an optical packet switched network. The impact of the architecture on the traffic characteristics is studied and a hardware implementation method of the architecture is described. The aggregation method will help to provide quality of service at fine granularity while increasing the performance of the optical network by traffic shaping.