

In the last few years, the research and education community has pioneered a new approach to supporting the deployment of collaborative applications. By using our institutions to broker our needs for security, directories, privacy, etc, we can leverage that infrastructure to support activities among our institutions. Based on early successes, this talk will identify new opportunities in desktop video, digital libraries, virtual organisation tools and other important applications where enterprise middleware will be enabling widespread use of collaborative tools.