David W Chadwick is professor of information systems security at the University of Salford. His research interests include PKI usability, trust management, and policy-based security. He received a PhD from the University of Salford. He is a member of IEEE and ACM. Contact him at D.W.Chadwick@salford.ac.uk.

Darren Mundy is a research assistant at the University of Salford. His research interests include information security, especially in the health sector. He holds a First Class Honours Degree in Computer Science and Information Systems from the University of Salford, and is presently progressing towards a PhD in the field of Internet Security. Contact him at d.mundy@salford.ac.uk.

Edward Thornton is a research assistant at the University of Salford. His research interests focus mainly on LDAP directories and performance testing. He holds a First Class Honours Degree in Information Technology from the University of Salford, and is presently progressing towards a MPhil in performance measurement. Contact him at E.J.Thornton@pgt.salford.ac.uk.