

BIOGRAPHY

Serena Pastore is an electronic engineer at the National Institute of Astrophysics in Padova, Italy. In 1995 she started working as network system administrator, web developer and system analyst and integrator. From 2003 she is involved in several projects of INAF in R&D field of assessing and testing technologies in astronomical field: application of new distributed network technology (grid and web services) in science, the Virtual Observatory project and research of technological solutions for education, outreach, and information of Astrophysics.

She has published papers about grid computing and mobile learning in astronomy presenting them to international conference as speaker.